Final Thoughts

1. When something makes no sense at all, it must be true, right? What do you think about Osborne's example of the "exploding toilet?" Do we know people who are notorious for passing along these kinds of stories? Do we? Is there any real harm in sharing myths with others? Explain.
2. How can we protect ourselves against myths and legends?
3. Why is it important to accept the answers to our myth busting questions? (think about the massive 1999 Turkish Earthquake when 30 years prior people ran into a truth they did not like...)
4. What is our role in this whole myth busting thing; is there anything we can do?
